AGA CAST IRON Made in Britain

Inside every new piece of Cast Iron cookware there is a little bit of an old one.

History

Cast iron has been part of Britain's history for over three centuries. Abraham Darby founded the Coalbrookdale Company in Shropshire, now renowned as The Birthplace of the Industrial Revolution. It is here that he developed the smelting of iron with coke instead of charcoal to make cast iron cooking pots.

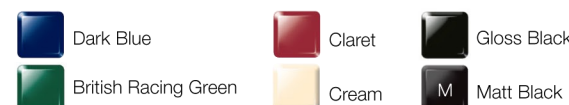

The Coalbrookdale Foundry is still very much a working foundry today making castings for the AGA cooker, Rayburn cooker as well as continuing its tradition in producing the AGA range of cast iron cooking vessels. Each casting is hand made and has its own unique sand mould, which is destroyed after use.

Traditional

AGA Traditional Cast Iron cookware has been specially designed for use on AGA, Rayburn and all range cookers. The design makes for optimum cooking performance, even heat distribution and excellent heat retention.

Featuring a flat machined ground base to ensure maximum contact with solid hotplate and a rich, highly durable enamelled finish, that is available in up to nine attractive colours.

KETTLES

A boiling kettle is synonymous with the warmth and hospitality of a Rayburn kitchen. Suitable for all heat sources except induction, our kettles are designed for maximum performance with a thick solid base. A good base ensures a quick boiling time.

10
GUARANTEE

Handy hint...It's best to put your kettle on a trivet after boiling rather than keeping it on the Rayburn; that way you won't 'stew' the water or scratch the enamel surface.

Our trivets have rubber feet to keep your work surface or table scratch-free.

Resting the kettle on a trivet for 10 seconds before pouring the water will allow the spout to cool.
